Although the trek is possible throughout the winter, the best time for the Gangte Trek is between March-May and September-November. It is a short and relatively easy trek with several beautiful villages and monasteries en route.

The trail winds through forests of juniper, bamboo, magnolia and rhododendrons and over small streams of cold, clear mountain water. This trek is an excellent choice for those visitors not accustomed to trekking in the mountains as it offers beautiful views of the country with mostly gentle, forested slopes. The best time for this trek is between September-May.

Day 1. The Trek starts near the village of Tabiting

Zasa ♡

Phobjikha - Zasa

- Ascent: 610 m Descent: 410 m Camp altitude: 3,130 m.

We will begin our trek from Tabiting village. The trail winds through meadows and fields and the climb takes you through a mixed forest of juniper, bamboo, magnolia and rhododendron to Tsele La (3430m). Further on, the path leads to Gogona, well known for its "Gogona Cheese" production. The campsite is a bit further on besides a small stream in a yak pasture called Zasa.
